Oneida Indian Nation Honors Veterans at 19th Annual Recognition Ceremony

On Friday, November 8, the Oneida Indian Nation welcomed more than 400 veterans, active-duty service members and their guests to Turning Stone Resort Casino for its 19th annual Veterans Recognition Ceremony and Breakfast. This cherished yearly event is one of the largest of its kind in upstate New York.

Oneida Indian Nation Representative Ray Halbritter served as a presenting speaker. In his remarks, he addressed the Nation’s military history, its role as First Allies to American colonists during the Revolutionary War and its support of the military ever since.

“Our bond was forged nearly 250 years ago during the Revolutionary War when our nation, the Oneida Indian Nation, fought alongside the rebel colonists,” he said. “The Oneida people played a key role in the battles of Oriskany, Fort Stanwix and Saratoga, which were crucial to winning the war and ushering in the birth of America.”

Halbritter recognized Oneida Member veterans – and all veterans and active-duty service members – for their service. He also highlighted the great programs the Nation offers to assist veterans, including a partnership with PGA Hope Continuation Program.

Nation Representative Visits Fort Drum for Native American Heritage Month Celebration

Oneida Indian Nation Representative Ray Halbritter traveled to Fort Drum to serve as guest speaker at the National American Indian Heritage Month observance held at the base on November 20. Much like his remarks at the November 20 Veterans Day ceremony, Halbritter spoke of the Nation’s little-known role as America’s First Allies in the Revolutionary War and the legacy of service among Nation Members in every armed conflict since. American Indians have a proud history of military service in the US. Today, there

For Oneida Member Irv Lyons Jr.,
Music is Everything

Above Armory Square in downtown Syracuse is where Irv Lyons Jr. (Turtle Clan) spends his week days. The popular singer-songwriter and guitarist works at the Museum of Science and Technology as its chief development officer, a new role that he took on last December. Education is a deeply personal issue for Irv, particularly because of its role in the lives of American Indians, who have historically been disenfranchised and forgotten in the public school system.

That is what drew Irv to music at a very young age. School wasn’t easy for him, but that didn’t stop him from learning.

“Music was my education,” he said. “I picked up my first guitar at four years old. My uncle had a nice guitar and my mother had a great record collection. She really got me interested in music and it became something I was drawn to. I played all of their 45s and 33s – from Chubby Checker, The Platters and Ray Charles. She loved R&B.”

At twelve years old, Irv got his first record: "Abraxas" by the Latin rock band Santana. It was a seminal moment for Irv because that’s when music became more than a hobby. He taught himself to play by ear, and by the time he was a teenager, he knew he was “pretty good.”

“I went to bed with my guitar,” Irv said. “When you’re passionate about something, the learning process is no barrier. I was like a sponge. I learned chords by learning a song – and eventually you meet other kids and musicians, and you pick up ideas.”

Irv remembers some of his first-ever gigs playing local clubs and school dances. The band he was in, The 13th Hour, played the classic rock hits of the day, such as Grand Funk Railroad, Free, Edgar Winter and others. He said it was a thrill putting all of that music together.

“When you’re done with your set and everyone says they love it – you get caught up in that excitement,” he recalled. “A former band mate actually recalled. “A former band mate actually knew he was “pretty good.”

Irv graduated from West Genesee High School in 1976. Through countless gigs during his high school days, the influences in his playing style became clear. His Carlos Santana-esque sound is instantly recognizable, but made all his own due to his inimitable technique. Irv is left handed but learned to play on a right-handed guitar, which means the strings run high to low instead of low to high.

His signature guitar – a baby blue Fender Stratocaster he’s had for more than ten years – was custom-built by guitar guru Chuck Dean and features a left-handed body (volume and tone knobs would be on top if you played right handed). But instead of stringing it so he can play traditionally (low to high), he keeps it strung so a right hander can play it.

“There’s nothing like a Stratocaster,” he said. “It’s so versatile.”

Irv has been a staple of the Syracuse-area music scene for years. He and his cousin, Rex Lyons (Onondaga), formed the Ripcords in the early 2000s – a five-piece band playing primarily Americana roots, rockabilly and blues music influenced by New Orleans.

“Playing with Rex has been great,” Irv said. “He’s native and I’m native, which is something you can’t take away. It was an instant connection – and when you’re making music with other people, something ethereal happens.”

The band prides itself on its musical independence and variety, as well as its strong original numbers. About five years ago, the band added a horn section that infused some additional power to the bluesy quintet. They continue to add obscure covers to their sets to keep things fresh and fun, both for the crowd and themselves.

“We don’t like to play the music that everybody else is doing,” Irv said of the iconic local band. “Lots of people would call us the Jr. Mavericks, which I take as a huge compliment.”

The Mavericks built a successful career throughout the 1990s playing a combination of neo-traditional country and rockabilly styles.

The Ripcords were somewhat of a reintroduction to the music scene for Irv, who spent twenty years prior to the band’s formation serving in the United States Army. Irv put the guitar down for a while to focus on his family and, ultimately, retired from the service in 2000.

The music of the Ripcords also led to his own songwriting. In late 2018, Irv released his latest solo album "Brothers and Sisters" to critical acclaim. It features the single “Lookin’ For The Light,” which was nominated for Song of the Year at the 2019 Native American Music Awards, held at the Seneca Niagara Resort. The album itself was also nominated for Best Rock Recording.

“You’d be amazed how many Native Americans are making great music,” he said. “From 2001 to 2011, the GRAMMY’s featured a Native American award, but it was dissolved, which was an insult to me. So the Native American Music Awards has become bigger and its production is world class – like all awards show you’d see on television.”

When he recorded the album at Subcat Studios in Syracuse, he also signed to its record label that will help produce and push out his future releases. Irv also signed to a national management agency to position himself for the best opportunities in the coming months.

“The record is really a compilation of different styles because I wanted to showcase my songwriting,” he said. “I wanted to position myself in a different light.”

Recording and mixing the entire album took six months and was full of his signature Stratocaster sound. The classic tone and sonic color of the Stratocaster is all over the best rock albums, regardless of time period. Its versatility continues to be an asset valued by many musicians.

Irv is already in the final mixing process of his new single, which features singer Melanie Cramer. He’s got a library of around fifty to sixty other songs that he’s hoping to either put to tape or sell to publishers.

“I’ve got something for everyone on this album,” he said. “It’s got more jazz and Latin elements than the Ripcords material, but some straight up rock and roll too. I really wanted to show all I can do.”

Now, looking out of his corner office at the MOST, Irv wants to instill that similar work ethic in kids interested in science and technology. He says that the mission at the MOST is not far off from the traditional Haudenosaunee proverb—that in every deliberation we must consider the impact on the seventh generation.

“The future really is in STEM fields. A lot of jobs here can’t be filled because kids aren’t qualified in science, technology, engineering or mathematics,” he said. “When the kids visit, you can see the look of discovery on their faces when they’re interacting with the exhibits. It’s great that we’re able to spark that interest.”

Music has led Irv on a tremendous journey, and it’s one that he’s excited to continue. Still, he recalls the intense drive he needed to become a successful musician.

“I still practice two to three hours a day,” he said. “You have to do it. I’m always trying to get better.”

and Clear Path for Veterans, which provides golf instruction to disabled veterans.

Nation Member Mary Blau (Turtle Clan) recited the Thanksgiving Address in the Oneida language before breakfast was served, and the Nation also announced a $1,000 donation to Feed Our Vets Utica Pantry, a long-time participant at the event.

US Representative Anthony Brindisi, a life-long Utica resident, served as the event’s keynote speaker. The Congressman emphasized the progress he’s made in ensuring veterans get the services they’ve earned. His bipartisan leadership in Washington has brought the entire Mohawk Valley region – home to more than 50,000 veterans – closer together. His remarks touched upon the idea that we are all Americans first and that the country is forever in the debt of our dedicated service men and women.

“Whether it’s access to healthcare at the VA, whether it’s job training, whether its access to housing or food, it’s important that year round we do all that is within in our power to pay tribute to our veterans who sacrificed for us,” Brindisi said in his address.

A long-time advocate for veterans, Congressman Brindisi recently had his first bill signed into law, which preserves critical VA housing and travel programs for veterans and their families.

Oneida Member Mary Blau recited the Thanksgiving Address in the Oneida language to the more than 400 guests at the annual Veterans Recognition Ceremony and Breakfast on Nov. 8.
Oneida Member Chip Isaacs (Turtle Clan) US Army, attended the annual event. Chip served two tours of duty, from 1966 – 1969 in Viet Nam as a staff sergeant in the Army.

are more than 31,000 American Indian and Alaskan Native members of the Armed Forces. Nation Members continue to serve today.

American Indians serve in the armed forces at a higher rate than any other demographic.

Since 9/11, nearly 19 percent of Native Americans have served in the armed forces, compared to an average of 14 percent of all other ethnicities. (militarytimes.com)

The special event highlighted the need to develop STEM education, particularly in the American Indian community.

“The Armed Forces has consistently provided access to specialized training and job opportunities that has been historically closed to Native Americans elsewhere,” Halbritter said. “The education gap is particularly acute in the STEM fields. Our young people are worthy of so much more, and the military provides important stepping stones for our people.”

Halbritter also highlighted Defense Department initiatives like the Army Educational Outreach Program, which supports STEM education and the expansion of the GI Bill to help transitioning service members receive STEM training.

“The US military has treated us as equals and leaders, not as relics and punchlines,” he said in closing. “As the United States’ most diverse organization – one that values higher education and offers limitless training – the military serves as one of the best chances in which Native Americans have to take hold of their future.”

Oneida Indian Nation Representative Ray Halbritter delivered the keynote address during the Fort Drum Native American Heritage Month celebration Nov. 20.
